THURSDAY MORNING, AUGUST 18, 1859.

THE LAST BULLET. An Incident of Commodore Stewart's Algerine

Experience. The United States ship-of-war Constellation was anchored in the harbor of Algiers, whither she had proceeded under command of Commodore Preble, having on board, among other officers, Charles Stewart, then an Acting Lieutenant.

It was the watch of young Stewart, and he was pacing to and fro on the deck, about half an hour after sunset, when he saw a small beat, containing a single person, coming off from the Old Port, as the western part of the town is called, and heading directly for

This person was rowing with all his might, and Stewart was not long in discovering the cause. Close behind the single boatman was seen a large rover filled with men, whose presence was announced by a continual firing at him of whom they were in such determined pursuit, holding on their way until they were under the very guns of the ship. "Now, by my soul!", cried Stewart, "may I be shot if I don't teach those fellows a lesson. Stand by, Mr. Rogers," he added, addressing a favorice gunner, "to throw a little grape into that fellow.'

An instant later a wreath of smoke curled up from the side of the ship, and as the report went booming over the water the iron messenger sped on its way, crashing into the pursuing boat, severely wounding two or three of her crew. She instantly turned to put back, at the same time that the fugitive reached his destination and came up the side into the presence of the officer of the deck.

He was an elderly man, with a stout frame and brownish features; but it required but a single glance from the lieutenant to see that he was English or American. As soon as he was sufficiently recovered from his over-exertion to breathe, he went on to tell his story, to which Stewart listened with much excitement.

The new comer was an American citizen, named James Collins, a native of New York, who, with his wife and daughters, had been taken from an American vessel at the same time as its commander and crew two years before by an Algerine pirate. His wife had since died, and he and his daughter had been enduring since his capture all the horrors of a hopeless and aggravated captivity; but the worst part of the poor man's story, and that which moved Lieut. Stewart the most, was the announcement that his daughter, a gentle and beautiful girl, was on the very eve of being forced into a detestable union with the very wretch who bad bought her and her father as slaves.

"My agony at these circumstances culminated not two hours ago," finished the father, "when I struck the persecutor insensible to my feet and fled. By dint of exertion I managed to reach the water side, and embarked before the pursuers could prevent it. But, though I have succeeded in reaching this place of safety, my poor Alice is still in the power of her tormentor, exposed to his vengeance, and I am almost crazy at thinking that she even may now be subjected to a fate worse than death. If I could only guide a boat's crew, under your orders" "One moment," interrupted Stewart .-

"Stay where you are until I have seen Commodore Preble.

One moment the youg lieutenant was engaged with his commander in the cabin, and then he came forth with a stern smile of satisfaction on his features. Ten minutes more chosen men pushed off in the darkness, with and rapidly struck out for the shore. "Our owner," said Mr. Collins, "resides in the western part of the city. There is a coast are not residents of this State,-It is ordered guard established, but I do not apprehend that the said defendants appear here within one that we shall have any especial trouble from that source. I think we can land below, go up the streets to the house, and carry off my child, and all without losing a man.'

The boat landed, after twenty minutes of rapid progress, at a small wharf near the Geleta, in the western part of the town. -The arrival was certainly observed, but not a great deal of attention was bestowed upon it by the stupid Algerines. Leaving part of his men in the cutter, with orders for them to lie down under the wharf, Lieut. Stewart and the remainder of his force followed the footsteps of Mr. Collins, who led the way rapidly up the intervening streets.

On ariving at his late prison, an old, dingylooking structure, extremely spacious, having all the looseness of the Moorish style, the party discovered that silence and darkness were the principal features of the scene. Not a sound was heard nor a word uttered. The whole building seemed deserted. The agony of the father was extreme.

"O, my child!", he cried, no longer able to control the terrible emotions which had been surging through his soul during the last hour, "shall I never see thee more?"

A Moorish slave came around from the rear of the building, and assured his fellow captive that the girl had been carried off by the master, and that no one was at home save himself. But even as the lying rascal uttered the concluding words a wild shrick was heard in the chamber, and the next moment a young and beautiful girl of seventeen summers appeared at one of the front windows, looking like a spectre in her garments of spotless

"My child, my Alice!" exclaimed Mr. Col-

"Save me, father!" was the response; and while shouts and groans were heard proceeding from the interior of the building the maiden threw herself from the low window, falling into the very arms of her father and Lieutenant Stewart.

The very moment of this reunion was destined to be that in which a company of Algerine troops came around the nearest corner, marching up the street in the direction of Lieut. Stewart and his men. It was also at the same moment that the old Moor, who had so long considered himself the proprietor of Mr. Collins and his daughter, came to the window and set up a startling yell.

"This way!", cried Mr. Collins, and he dashed open the front door of the building, and conducted the entire party within. Look to your weapons, and take the rascals off their pins the instant they halt!", said Stewart.

A sharp and determined struggle soon commenced, in the course of which half the Moorish soldiers were killed, and the remainder finally gave way. But the rescuers had expended all of their ammunition, and only a single bullet was remaining; that was in a large horse-pistol in the possession of Li ut. Stewart. He was just wondering what he should do with it, when the old Moor came down stairs with a huge sabre in his grasp, and made a furious dash at Mr. Collins and his daughter, with murder written on his features and flashing from his eyes. This sudden arrival decided the destination of the

"Take it, you black devil!", cried Stewart. just as the fearful blow was descending, and he fired his weapon, the ball passing through the miscreant's head and bringing him dead

"Now, boys," added Lieutenant S., "we are going to finish with a hand to hand fight. The powder and ball are out; we must trust to the sword." Closely followed by his men as well as by Mr. Collins and Alice, the Lieutenant led the way towards the boat. It seemed as if Algiers had turned out to witness the trium. Wins HILL, BROWN & PARTLOW. WOOL purchased by RIDGELRY, HAMPTON & C.).

phal retreat, the streets being filled with thousands of men and women collected together by the brief contest at the Moor's house, but not an attempt was made to intercept the progress of the party, the Algerines contenting themselves with scowls and denunciations. Ten minutes later the rescuers were at the cutter; twenty more and the entire party were safely back to the Constellation, not having lost a man. The young lieutenant received the hearty thanks of his superior, to say nothing of the gratitude of Mr. Collins and his daughter, whose family proved to be of consequence in New York; and we are assured that Charley Stewart was never happier in his life than when Miss Alice was united to one of his "chums," a noble hearted lieutenant now a commodore, who fell in love with the rescued maiden during the Constellation's homeward passage.
